RIYADH (Reuters) - One hundred million people living in Saudi Arabia could be completely out of work if oil prices remain below $60 per barrel, a senior adviser to the Deputy Crown Prince said on Saturday. Saudi Arabia is the world's biggest oil exporter and the leader of OPEC, a group of oil-producing countries that is trying to stabilize the global crude market. "If oil prices continue at current levels, those 100 million people could be without jobs," Sheikh Mohamed bin Sultan al-Saud told the Arab News newspaper. "Saudi Arabia will face a prolonged period of unemployment. The number

could be more if oil prices go down," he added.

Asked if Saudi Arabia would quit OPEC if the group's efforts to moderate oil prices failed, Sheikh Saud said: "We will need to consider the consequences for all of us. It is not in anybody's interest to have high unemployment." He said that if oil prices remain at current levels of around $60 per barrel, he expects the country to bring 2 million new jobs, including in the field of construction. "That figure has been reduced from 10 million because of the massive investment needed to build the new cities and factories," he said. "Our economic planners are already working on how to carry out such construction." The Saudi economy grew at an average of around 10 percent per year from 2000 to 2010, but industry experts say this is likely to shrink in the future as the government tries to wean the kingdom off the money it earns from oil. "We think that by the end of this decade, the Saudi economy will be in a much better position," Sheikh Saud said. "The government is trying to diversify the economy...but the growth needs to be sustainable." (Reporting by Mohammed Hmaym)A Thai court has sentenced 11 people to prison for their roles in a protest that briefly blocked a major Bangkok road and contributed to a fiery stand-off between police and protesters. Protesters blocked the motorway at the beginning of the month and threw stones at police as well as aggressively approaching them, leading to a three-hour standoff between the two sides. The protest ended after police took 17 of the demonstrators into custody and freed three others, including opposition leader Suthep Thaugsuban who was arrested last month on charges he plotted the violent protest. Protesters protesting the outcome of Thailand's general election dismissed the trial verdict as a scam and pledged to 3e33713323
